

have envisioned himself among those men. But that trip to Washington changed his life.

"My parents had taken Don and me East partly to attend Bill's graduation from Princeton. I remember going to the Senate chamber, sitting in the balcony and thinking, 'Gee, I would like to do that sometime.'"

And so in that hour was born a dream that would not be denied. Neither of his parents was interested in politics as a career but it was typical of them, Jack said, that they supported and encouraged whatever their children chose.

"It was a wonderful childhood. They were both very loving and supportive of us. They thought of us as different individuals. They were non-directive. They didn't tell us what to do. Rather, they encouraged our strengths.

"Donald Danforth was really a wonderful father, a very kind man and very loving. Every memory I have of my father is of a loving father, of a man who liked to hug us a lot.

"With my brothers and sister and me, it was never fear that motivated us. It was a desire to make our parents proud. That, to me, is the great motivator. Even now that they are gone, I want to make them proud and make my wife proud, and our kids proud.

"For our children, it is the same. We are very proud of them. They are also very different. And they are really good kids. They have good values and are nice people."

None has chosen to follow him into politics although two have followed him into the law. The eldest, Eleanor (Mrs. Allan IV) Ivie, lives here and keeps busy rearing her three sons. Mary (Mrs. Thomas) Stillman has her law degree and is assistant dean at Washington University. She is the mother of a boy and girl. Dorothy (Mrs. Johannes) Burlin, known to the family as D.D., also is a lawyer, practicing under the name of Danforth. Johanna (Mrs. Timothy) Root, known as Jody, is a hospice nurse in Connecticut. Thomas is a senior at St. Olaf College in Northfield, Minn.

"In our family, the dinner table was and is important. That was the time you knew the family would be together. We weren't going to watch television. We would sit there and talk.

"At the Senate I frequently got home late but it was still important for us to be together. I would always ask the children, 'Tell me about your day.' Sally is the same way. It's important just to find the chance to show interest in kids and to take pride in them, to find something they can do well and appreciate that, to let them know you feel they are terrific. Everyone has something that you can appreciate and praise."

Although Jack's desire to go into the ministry did not blossom until his college days at Princeton when he happened to have a free hour in his class schedule and a faculty advisor suggested a religion course in ethics. "I liked that course and took another and ended up majoring in religion. I was really interested and decided between my junior and senior years that I wanted to go into the seminary so I entered Yale Divinity School.

"It was soon apparent that this was not for me as a full-time career. The parish ministry was something I was not equipped for so I reverted to my original idea to go to law school and by the time I started unwinding my career path I was two years into Divinity School." So in 1963, he received both degrees.

But Jack Danforth had a third string to his bow—politics. In 1968, in his first race for public office, Missouri attorney general, he achieved the first Republican victory in a statewide race in more than 20 years and began a period of reform and two-party politics in Missouri.

He was re-elected in 1972, went to the Senate four years later and was re-elected in 1982 and 1988.

In this public life, he has received numerous honors. The most recent—as co-recipient with Chancellor Danforth—is the Regional Commerce and Growth Association's Right Arm of St. Louis award.

In 1988, one of the greatest honors in America—the vice presidency—might have been his, rather than Dan Quayle's.

James Baker, who was handling George Bush's 1988 campaign, asked him to submit material as a potential choice for the office, and although he was far from enthusiastic, he sent it.

"I was at the convention just one day. I had just returned home when I got a call from Bush saying he had selected Quayle as his running mate. 'I said, 'I'm happy to hear that.' Bush said in disbelief, 'You are?'"

Even the top office has never tempted him. "It would be too pre-emptive of my life. The only reason to run for president is to win and if you win, that's all you are for the rest of your life.

"No, once I am out of the Senate, I am not a senator. You are not a senator for the rest of your life. You close the book on that even though it was a wonderful chapter."

Now that John Claggett Danforth has come home again, the book is opened again for the next chapter.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LOTT. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. SNOWE). Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDERS FOR TOMORROW AMENDED

Mr. LOTT. Madam President, I have a couple of unanimous consent requests which have been checked with the Democratic leader and have been cleared.

So at this time I ask unanimous consent that the orders for tomorrow be amended to reflect that the period for morning business be extended to the hour of 10:30 a.m. with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each and that at 10:30 the Senate begin consideration of the unfunded mandates bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MEASURE PLACED ON THE CALENDAR—H.R. 1

Mr. LOTT. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that H.R. 1, the House companion bill to the congressional coverage bill, be placed on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. LOTT. Madam President, finally, if no further business is to come before the Senate—I only see one other Senator waiting to speak. After the conclusion of the remarks by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess as previously ordered.
